Good morning, booze; goodbye, plastic bags

Aldermen back 8 a.m. grocery store liquor sales

Chicago Tribune

Large grocery stores in Chicago would be able to start ringing up beer, wine and liquor sales three hours earlier on Sundays under a plan that aldermen gave preliminary blessing to Wednesday.

The move to let people start purchasing booze at 8 a.m. Sundays instead of 11 a.m. was billed as a way to help city grocers compete with suburban alcohol retailers. Ald. Pat O'Connor's proposal applies to stores larger than 10,000 square feet with no more than 25 percent of their shelf space dedicated to liquor sales.

Still, O'Connor didn't get everything he wanted. The 40th Ward alderman, who is Mayor Emanuel's floor leader, scaled back his idea of pushing all liquor sales to 8 a.m. Sundays. Several aldermen opposed that on the grounds they didn't want loitering outside liquor stores early in the morning and didn't want to make it easier for alcoholics to get their hands on booze earlier in the day.

"The concern, as I understand it, was that some of the smaller venues, the convenience stores, just liquor stores or taverns that sell liquor, that they had concern that would be a problem early on a Sunday," O'Connor said.

The Sunday II a.m. start to booze sales has been in place for "many, many decades" in Chicago, city Liquor Commissioner Gregory Steadman told aldermen earlier this year, in part because religious groups wanted to keep Sunday morning as a time for worship.

O'Connor first began exploring a change to the start time after talking to grocery store owners about moving into empty Dominick's stores. The new version of the ordinance would not allow larger liquor retailers like Binny's Beverage Depot to sell earlier on Sundays, but O'Connor said it's possible the ordinance could be changed later if the more conservative version passes the council and there aren't any problems.

City headed toward partial plastic bag ban with compromise

Chicago Tribune

Large chain and franchise stores in Chicago would have to stop providing plastic bags to customers in August 2015 under a compromise measure that is gaining support among City Council members and has the backing of Mayor Emanuel.

The plastic bag ban would apply to smaller franchise and chain stores a year later—August 2016—but independent stores would be exempted from the new ordinance, which was retooled to protect smaller retailers who operate near city borders with suburbs that don't have bans. The plastic bag ban also would not apply to restaurants.

If the ban advances through a Thursday committee meeting it will go before the full council April 30.

IN OTHER CITY COUNCIL NEWS

- » Unlicensed valet parking operators could be hit with fines ranging from $2,000 to $5,000 and face the possibility of being charged with a misdemeanor under a measure a City Council committee endorsed Wednesday. The proposal is set for a vote of the full council April 30.
- Chicago residents who get caught trying to avoid the city's motor vehicle sticker costs by registering their cars in other cities would face stiffer penalties under a plan aldermen gave preliminary approval Wednesday.
- » Free Sunday parking in a host of North Side and Northwest Side shopping districts soon would vanish under changes the City Council Transportation Committee endorsed.

Don't be scared of the world's 'hardest job'

Killacky

Late last year, I gave birth to a daughter. I was understandably excited, but fear set in as well. Not just the fear of potentially leaving her on the hood of my car and driving off like I do with my coffee on a weekly basis, but the fear of pure exhaustion and life-altering selflessness I was about

While I've only been fearful of the

to take on. Other parents did nothing to help this. "Your life's about to change," "be prepared to not sleep for the next 18 years* and the cliched being a mom is the hardest job in the world," they warned.

While I've only been at this new gig for less than six months, I feel the need to ease the minds of those fearful of the daunting task of having children. In my short experience, I don't find parenting to be the hardest job I've ever had. (Before the backlash begins, I'm aware that everyone's situation is different.)

It's all relative.

My brothers have done a couple of stints overseas, fighting in the desert for our country for months on end. If I'm in the sun for more than 20 minutes, I complain about heat rash and dehydration. Which would you rather do: crouch in fatigues in the sweltering heat, or debate whether to hit up story time or play group?

There are easier jobs than being a parent,

I suppose. One summer I was a receptionist at a tanning salon and read Vogue behind a desk all day as I checked people in. Having a baby definitely is harder than that.

For seven years I was a cocktail waitress on the Sunset Strip between acting gigs, struggling with rejection and an empty bank account by day and hipsters wanting spicy tuna rolls without spice or tuna by night. I did a short stint in insurance, and my baby is way more entertaining than codes and claims. I wasn't really cut out for sales either, seeing as my first phone call ended with me buying a crate of vitamin water from the person I was supposed to be pitching. Maybe my skill set is just more conducive to singing "Itsy Bitsy Spider" so times in a row.

Are there inconveniences and unpredictability involved in parenting? Indeed. Are the stakes higher than even a heart surgeon because of my emotional investment? Without a doubt. Is there a lot of poop and spit-up and whining and 48-hour blocks of time that drive me to drink? Not more than with some of the guys I've dated.

If having a baby is on your mind but you're worried about how your life will change, chances are the biggest difference you'll see is how much better of a person you'll become. You'll get more sleep with afternoon snuggles than you would on a Vegas bender or curing insomnia via Facebook. And if you do leave her on the hood of your car, she'll forgive you. They don't have the ability to remember till they're, like, three.

Selig goes to bat for Cubs in rooftop battle

Chicago Tribun

Major League Baseball Commissioner Bud Selig came out swinging Wednesday on behalf of the Ricketts family, which he believes is being treated unfairly by the Chicago media in their battle with rooftop owners.

Selig said he'll do "whatever is legally" possible to help the Cubs get their $300 million ballpark renovation plan underway.

"That's how strongly I feel about preserving Wrigley Field," he said. "You can't ask a team to be competitive and you can't ask people to do things and then tie their hands and their legs. It's just wrong. Somebody has to say it's wrong, and I'm going to say it."

The process has been held up by the roof-top owners' threats to sue the Cubs if their views are blocked by the proposed signage and a jumbo-sized video board. The Cubs and rooftop owners signed a 20-year agreement in 2004, in which the rooftops give the team 17 percent of their revenues.

Selig was speaking at a press conference in the Wrigley Field press box lunch room, after participating in pre-game ceremonies for the 100th anniversary of the ballpark.

"This is a team trying to stay in this historic setting in a really tough economic environment, trying to modernize without disturbing the tradition, trying to build a competitive baseball team," he continued. "And I said ... I think they're doing it. But you can't impose conditions on them that nobody else has, because nobody else has those [conditions]."

But didn't the Cubs agree to those conditions in the 2004 contract?

"Well, this ownership didn't," he replied. "They're willing to do whatever their contract says. But I feel very strongly about that."

Cubs Chairman Tom Ricketts did not address the media, leaving Selig to do the dirty work.

Items for sale at The Pothole Store website include a certificate of ownership for a Chicago pothole (clockwise from top left), pothole snow globes and pothole earrings.

Joke product line fills a market hole

Chicago Tribune

Looking for that perfect souvenir to remember winter in Chicago?

A Chicago entrepreneur has enjoyed surprising success after creating The Pothole Store, a tongue-in-cheek website (thepotholestore. com) selling pothole earrings ($3.99), pothole snow globes ($11.99) and the most popular item: a certificate of ownership for the Chicago pothole of your choice ($6.99).

"I think Chicagoans, we wear our imperfections like a badge of honor," said Dave Stern, 50, whose pothole website has brought in more than $1,000 since he launched it as a joke in November. "This is a little bit like that, in saying, 'We survived this winter. It wasn't much fun, but we did it and can even laugh at ourselves a little bit.'"

Stern, co-owner of a Chicago publishing house called Eckhartz Press, launched the humorous site after noticing an unusually menacing number of craters across city streets. With a photographer already on staff and friends familiar with website production, the team amused themselves by inventing products such as Pothole Pourri and Pothole scented air fresheners.

"I just figured it would be a fun little schticky thing to do," Stern said.

And then orders started coming in. The largest group of customers has been people who know someone whose car was damaged by a pothole. A bride ordered 20 sets of pothole jewelry to give to her wedding party, Stern said.

Stern met with a lawyer to make sure there's nothing problematic with his products. The fine print on the registry certificates reads: "The International Pothole Registry doesn't technically have the right or authority to dispense naming rights on City of Chicago property. In addition, The International Pothole Registry has no control over when potholes are filled. Registration is for entertainment purposes only."

But, Stern said, "You can feel very confident that the piece of crumbling asphalt that is on your earring has come from the great city of Chicago."

Ferry corpses reveal attempts to escape

MOKPO, South Korean South Korean divers swam though dark, cold waters into a sunken ferry Wednesday, feeling for children's bodies with their hands in a maze of cabins, corridors and upturned decks as they searched for hundreds of missing.

The divers, with oxygen and communications lines trailing, can only see a few inches in front of them in the wreckage of the ship that started sinking a week ago after a sharp turn. Most of the victims were high school children, who were told to stay where they were for their own safety.

Most of the bodies found in the past two days have had broken fingers, presumably from the children frantically trying to climb the walls or floors to escape in their last moments, media said.

"We are trained for hostile environments, but it's hard to be brave when we meet bodies in dark water," diver Hwang Dae-sik told Reuters, as the funerals of 25 students were held near the capital, Seoul.

Underwater, at the site of the sunken Sewol, divers are able to work for nearly an hour at a time as long as the oxygen lines do not snag on sharp corners of the ship's internal structure. When they use cumbersome oxygen tanks on their backs instead, they can work for about 20 minutes before an alarm bell sounds.

The Sewol sank April 16 on a routine trip from the port of Incheon, near Seoul, to the southern island of Jeju.

Of the 476 passengers and crew on board, 339 were children and teachers on a high school outing. Only 174 people have been rescued, and the remainder are presumed to have drowned.

The confirmed death toll Wednesday was 150, many found at the back of the ship on the fourth deck.

LAUGH FACTORY

It's all fun and games until the Hawks and Blues head to OT

By Chris Sosa I REDEYE

Say this for St. Louis coach Ken Hitchcock: He's got a sense of humor and isn't afraid to use it. Like when a reporter asked about Jonathan Toews and Patrick Kane playing on the same line, he cracked: "I don't think [Hawks coach Joel Quenneville's] fighting very fair, quite frankly:" Good one, Coach. We know a good icebreaker (see what we did there?) when we see one. So what other wisecracks would be have for Wednesday's Game 4 at the United Center? We have some guesses.

FIRST PERIOD

- Blues defenseman Roman Polak gives Johnny Oduya a two-handed shove well after the Hawks defenseman stole the puck and dished it off. Coach Hitchcock says: "He was just trying to make sure the guy's shirt fit."
- Kane steals the puck in the Blues zone and fires a shot through a screen that Ryan Miller corrals in his glove.

Hitchcock says: "Isn't there a rule against stealing in the NHL? No? There should be."

Michal Handzus flattens Steve Ott when they get tangled near the net, though the Hawks end up with power play.

Hitchcock says: "Ref totally screwed us by jumping in too early. Our guy was supposed to break out the chair and flatten Handzus. That's how the WWE writers drew it up."

Score: Blackhawks O, Blues O

SECOND PERIOD

Hawks defensemen Michal Rozsival is sent to the box for hooking.

Hitchcock says: "I had a bad dream where I tried that for a living. I was broke and trying to get out of Nevada. I'm much better at coaching hockey."

Andrew Shaw sets off a United Center frenzy by swatting in a rebound to give the Hawks the lead on the power play.

Hitchcock says: "Hey, Andrew, Roger Federer called. He wants his backhand back."

» Vladimir Tarasenko cuts the Blues' deficit to 2-1 immediately after Kane is penalized for delay of game. And with 3.1 seconds left in the period, Maxim Lapierre ties it with a shot off the post, Hitchcock says: "How come they don't play a happy ditty when WE score? I'm lodging a formal complaint."

Score: Blackhawks 2, Blues 2

Miller robs Kane from about 5 feet away on a backhand shot. Hitchcock says: "I was THIS CLOSE to being able to catch the replay of 'The Daily Show' at my hotel." » Kane makes it look soooooo easy. Chicago feels for you, Ryan Miller. (Not really.) Hitchcock says: "[BLLLLLEEEEEEPPPPPI]"

Final score: Blackhawks 4, Blues 3 More importantly: Series is tied.

THIRD PERIOD

- Marian Hossa nearly spikes it past Miller while being held up near the front of the Blues net.
- Hitchcock says: "Yeah, that Hossa guy, we hold 'ern, hit 'ern, slash 'ern—nothing seems to work. I'm open to ideas."
- » Tarasenko zips a wrist shot through Corey Crawford's legs to give St. Louis the lead. Suddenly, the UC needs 22,000 defibrillators.
- Hitchcock says: "It's too bad, really. Vlad was trying to flip it to that cute girl in the eighth row."
- Bryan Bickell tips in a long shot from the point by Roszival. Boom. Tie game. Hitchcock says: "Sorry, I missed that. I was too busy wondering why his helmet is too small for his head."

Score: Blackhawks 3, Blues 3

Just a grand old time

Wrigley Field turned 100 on Wednesday, and the ballpark looks, um, in need of a facelift. But no need to rain on the parade. From the looks of it, the Cubs had the essentials covered. REDEYE

GOODIES

A 5-foot-by-5-foot replica of the Friendly Confines made the trip from Carlo's Bakery in Hoboken, N.J.—made famous on the reality show "Cake Boss"—to the real Wrigley for the celebration. The 400-pound cake was made over six days by four bakers at Carlo's and includes familiar features such as the ivy and the iconic scoreboard.

PARTY FOUL

The Cubs blew a threerun, ninth-inning lead to fall 7-5 to Arizona. Poor Jeff Samardzija. He has allowed two earned runs or fewer in all his starts this season and has zero wins to show for it.

HOPE. SO MUCH HOPE

"It's just a fun, happy experience for today, to kind of look back and realize we've been here for 100 years," Cubs co-owner Todd Ricketts said. "And to think, we're going to be here for 100 more. That's the exciting part."

LIVELY GUESTS

Along with a who's who of Cubs legends, former Bears Dick Butkus and Gale Sayers were at the game. Beforehand, they reminisced about Sayers' six-touchdown game against San Francisco at Wrigley in 1965.

"You know what the funny thing is, though?

[Coach George] Halas took him out at the 1- or 2-yard line and put in Jon Arnett, because Gale would have the tendency to get the big head and everything," Butkus said, busting his friend's chops. "If he had scored seven touchdowns, you never would've heard the end of it."

Dancers from The Joffrey Ballet don pastels for spring

By Lisa Arnett and Dana Moran I REDEYE
Light colors make a return every spring, but pastels are having an especially big moment this season.
Who better to model a palette of pretty pinks, dreamy creams and crisp mints than dancers from The Joffrey Ballet? Just days short of the company's debut of "Romeo & Juliet" at the Auditorium Theatre (April 30-May 11; Joffrey.org/romeo), dancers Jenny Winton, Dara Holmes and Yoshihisa Arai suited up in this season's most screne hues in the Joffrey's studios at 10 E. Randolph St. in the Loop.

3 Bridgeport bars to visit on your trip to The Cell

By Kate Bernot | REDEYE

Most transplants to Chicago find themselves at a Cubs game before they make it to a Sox game, but why? While there's the allure—or threat, depending on your preferences—of a night out in Wrigleyville to draw you to the North Side, the area around U.S. Cellular has its own pre- and post-game scene (plus better beer inside the stadium). Here, our picks for the three essential Sox bars in Bridgeport, just in time for a home series this weekend. And before you cry foul, Cubbies, your essential bars will be coming soon.

KBERNOT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEEATDRINK

Cork & Kerry at the Park 3258 S. Princeton 312-842-0769

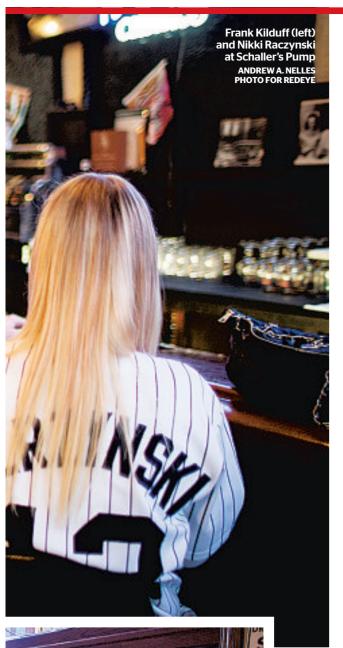

Looks like: A wood-walled sports bar with a smattering of framed black-and-white photos

Smells like: Burgers cooking Sounds like: An inoffensive alternative rock soundtrack under loud group conversations

Cork & Kerry at the Park opened four years ago in the former Jimbo's Lounge space, which was practically Sox fans' Holy Land. So yeah, big shoes to fill. Luckily, Cork & Kerry knows the South Side, having operated an iconic Beverly bar of the same name for decades. This Bridgeport location just blocks from The Cell now serves as a fairly roomy meeting place for baseball fans before, during and after a game. On a recent visit, I spotted groups of 20-somethings quickly finishing pints alongside a family of four in Red Sox gear eating burgers before the game. Surprisingly, the Wrong Sox weren't heckled or even teased (maybe it was the kids?).

Beers are fine—I had a Goose Island
Green Line pale ale and a New Belgium Snapshot wheat on my last visit—as were the tater tots I snacked on. The main draw is that the bar can accommodate crowds, even during peak pre-game hours.
If you can embrace crowds and a bartender wearing a "Beauty is always a light switch away" slogan
T-shirt, this is the spot to bring your whole crew.

Schaller's Pump

3714 S. Halsted St. 773-376-6332

Looks like: A windowless, brick-faced square with an Art Deconeon sign

Smells like: Nothing, unless you drift toward the kitchen, where a brownsauce-and-beef aroma lingers

Sounds like: Intermittent, cough-inducing belly laughs and a bartender joking with regulars

You can't fake the charms of age. Schaller's, which opened in 1881, knows this better than any other bar. Claiming double Chicago cred as an enthusiastic Sox bar as well as a storied hangout for once-upon-atime politicians and union bosses, it's practically out of a movie. The bar's older regulars seem to sit on the same barstools they've warmed since before you were born, but you'll catch young people here when the Sox are in town. Though your eyes likely will be glued to the TVs, try to pry them away during commercial breaks to take in a Chicago history lesson: the blackand-white wedding photo behind the bar, the Schaller Way honorary street sign on the wall, the menus boasting a $9.75 prime butt sandwich (which includes coleslaw and fries, and comes highly recommended by my bartender). Some iconic bars of this age are skeptical of newcomers, skittish around young people and just generally less than hospitable to those they deem neighborhood tourists. Not here. I grabbed a barstool and was greeted with a hearty "What'llitbe, darlin'? Love your haircut."

Looks like: A sports bar with high-top tables and a summertime sidewalk patio

Smells like: Frying food

Sounds like: Unremarkable music and bartenders' commentary about the Sox game

Turtle's is a catch-all. Maybe it's not a destination vou'd travel out of your way for, but when you have a group of friends—some of whom drink only Miller Lite, others who want a craft beer and only half of whom want to eat-you need a post-game bar that pleases everyone. Turtle's seems to do that. Watching a recent game from the barstools. I was in the company of a pair of 30-something dudes in Sox hats, a family digging into $5 Monday burger specials and my very animated bartender. "Are they challenging that play?" he shouted to a server as he cracked open a beer bottle. He glanced at the TV over his shoulder. "[Bleep]ing right they're challenging it!" Though the TVs' sound wasn't on, I felt like I had my own personal commentator spewing anecdotes and conjecture. And if you're a die-hard Sox fan, that should make you feel right at home.

ALBUM REVIEW

The New Classic

Note: This review is not an assessment of Iggy Azalea as a "serious" artist. It is not a commentary on whether Azalea, née 23-year-old Amethyst Amelia Kelly, has any right to drop rhymes in the manner of a Southern rapper when she actually hails from Australia. No, this is about that other aspect of music: fun.

By Dana Moran

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

Listening to Iggy Azalea is really fun. The kind of fun that makes me do duck lips and a sassy neck thing when I listen to her at my desk. Did you see the video for "Fancy"? It's Azalea and Charli XCX doing a nearly perfect re-creation of "Clueless"! This is some fun shiz!

The MC does attempt to inflate her "hardships" to legit rapper status on tracks such as "Work," lamenting, "I'm tryna let you know what the [bleep] I've been through" before detailing her school uniform and working three jobs to earn her plane ticket to Miami. But don't roll your eyes too hard! We're having fun here!

Guests such as T.I. and Rita Ora know that this is the kind of fun that sells. The former's appearance on "Change Your Life" also leads to what may be the album's most ridiculous verse, as Azalea quips, "We spend our winters in the summer of Australia/Eating crumpets with the sailors." When has the word "crumpet" ever appeared in a rap song?! This is hilarious!

Of course, some of these songs are all kinds of terrible. On "Lady Patra," an ode to the Jamaican dancehall singer, Azalea forcibly melds steel drums with her applied Southern accent in a way 99 percent grating, 1 percent likely to make a warthog pass out. (This may sound like a positive; it's not.) Factor in Jamaican singer Mavado's heavily (and I mean HEAVILY) Auto-Tuned vocals, and you've got yourself a lukewarm potato salad at a Fourth of July picnic. But hey! That's why the "skip" button was created.

I'm not taking Iggy Azalea too seriously, guys, and neither should you. After all, the artist formerly known as Ke$ha built an entire empire on neon lipstick and Jack Daniels mouthwash, and we don't expect her to be the Joan Baez of our generation. Would I listen to "The New Classic" again and enjoy myself? Hell yes.

It's probably not a coincidence that everyone involved with the Under the Influence of Music Tour 2014, arriving in Tinley Park on Aug. 5 and at Wisconsin's Alpine Valley Music Theatre on Aug. 9, has expressed strong affection for pot, and that tickets for the shows go on sale at 4:20 p.m. Friday. Anyway, the tour, featuring Wiz Khalifa, Tyga, Ty Dolla Sign, Rich Homie Quan, Sage the Gemini, Mack Wilds, IAMSU and DJ Drama, offers further proof that the California rap scene is having a moment this year. HBO climbing in bed with Amazon Prime

Los Angeles Times

HBO has cut a deal to sell reruns of many of its hit shows to Amazon's Prime Instant Video platform.

Among the programs that will be made available on Prime streaming service are "The Sopranos," "Six Feet Under," "The Wire," "Girls" and "Veep." The agreement also covers HBO's miniseries including "Band of Brothers" and original movies such as "Game Change."

As part of the pact, HBO's online streaming service HBO Go also will be available on Amazon's new Fire TV set-top box that is due to launch at the end of the year. HBO shows will be available on Prime Instant starting May 21.

The exclusive partnership is something of an about-face for HBO. In the past, the company has indicated it was not interested in selling its content to online subscription services, such as Netflix and Amazon, which it saw as competitors.

"As owners of our original programming, we have always sought to capitalize on that investment. Given our longstanding relationship with Amazon, we couldn't think of a better partner to entrust with this valuable collection," said Glenn Whitehead, HBO's executive vice president of business and legal affairs

Not wanting to potentially hurt its own business, repeats of episodes of shows currently on HBO such as "Girls" and "Veep" will not be available until three years after airing on the pay-TV channel.

"Game of Thrones," "Sex and the City" and "Curb Your Enthusiasm" are not part of this agreement. "Game of Thrones" is such a hit that HBO likely wants to see if there is a potentially bigger payoff in traditional media. The other two shows are available on other cable networks and, until those deals are up, can't be moved.

For once, we can't argue with People magazine a world of wardrobe malfunctions and waistline criticism, it's nice for People magazine to take a break twice a year to recognize the hottest of the famous hotties. The men have a title all their own (sexiest man alive), because the patriarchy, so the top slot on the mag's world's most-beautiful list tends to go to a woman. And this year, what a woman they have chosen: Oscar winner and overnight star Lupita Nyong'o! In celebration of this awesome choice, here are our favorite looks from America's newest sweetheart.

Bonus factoids

Three men have snagged the title of world's most beautiful person: Mel Gibson, Tom Cruise and Leonardo DiCaprio, in three consecutive years. Julia Roberts has won FOUR TIMES (1991, 2000, 2005 and 2010), and we would really like to know who she's paying off.

Toronto International Film Festival

September

The wrong person would swim in this shirt; Lupita just shines out of the cool neckline. Also, fancy shorts, yes, please.

Critics' Choice Movie Awards

Cutout dresses such as this have a tendency to look a bit ... trashy. On Lupita? Think again. And we just love her spacey silver eye makeup.

Telluride Film Festival

August
Doing this necklace in a tone that complements her shirt = a subtle mix of edgy and classy.

Golden Globes

Gwyneth Paltrow wore something really similar to this a few years ago and looked awesome. Lupita's is better because the cape is built INTO the dress.

Screen Actors Guild Awards

January

Boom! Color! Boom! Crazy neck flower thing! Boom! Minimal everything else! This couldn't have been pulled off by a star with long hair—it just would've been distracting.

Can't drive ... below 55

Your VHS copy of "Speed" could be worth a fortune to an Idaho man. Ryan Beitz is trying to collect every VHS copy of the Sandra Bullock/Keanu Reeves movie ever made, Vice reports. Thus far, he has more than 500 cassettes, along with 26 laser discs. "I don't want to spend money on this. If a copy's more than $4, I'll just steal

it. But that's not going to make me stop," he said. We're still developing our comments.

Totally real Barbie

Did anyone else own Totally Hair Barbie? The one with hair that went all the way down to her heels? She was kinda gross. Anyway, Sony and Mattel are developing a Barbie movie. deadline.com reports, referring to our fantastic plastic friend as "a fashion doll." No date has been set for the film, though this is a pretty genius concept considering all the tie-in merchandise.

THE DIGIT

$1,500

That's how much some Princess Elsa dresses from Disney's "Frozen" are selling for on eBay, thr.com reports. Note: They are meant to be worn by a child. One mom also reportedly spent $1,200 on an Elsa doll.

Let me see vour roll

Remember when Drake made fun of Jay Z for eating fondue? Little guy should watch himself. On Tuesday, the Canadian rapper was caught on video lintrolling his pants at the Brooklyn Nets/ Toronto Rappers game, Deadspin reports. And no. he didn't start from the bottom. When asked for comment, Jay Z said, "Bhahahahaha" (we imagine).

They've got the funny

GQ crafted the list of its 15 funniest people alive for its May issue. Here are the results; feel free to disagree. 1. Louis C.K.

2. Amy Schumer

3–4. Key & Peele 5–10. The cast of "Silicon Valley"

11. Kate McKinnon

12. John Oliver 13. Kevin Hart

14. Nick Kroll
